

On August 22, the meeting of the Management Consulting Business Schools of the National Academy of Sciences took place. The meeting was held in the form of a round table discussion. The participants discussed the current state of the industry and the role of consulting firms in the economy. The meeting was moderated by the Director of the School of National Academy of Sciences. The participants also discussed the challenges faced by consulting firms and the opportunities for growth. The meeting was held in a large, modern conference room with a curved wooden table and a large mural on the wall. The room was well-lit and had a professional atmosphere. The participants were all men in business attire. The meeting lasted for about two hours. The participants were very engaged and had many questions and comments. The meeting was a success and provided a good opportunity for the participants to share their experiences and ideas.
